Twitter for Job Seekers

Brooke Roegge,
Digital Information Specialist

MN Dept. of Employment and Economic Development

Introduction

- Goal of presentation:
Give you resources to take back to your library's job seeking patrons
- Presentation assumes participants have basic working knowledge of Twitter.
- Need an introduction to Twitter? Try these books:
 1. The Twitter Book by Tim O'Reilly and Sarah Milstein
 2. Twitter: Tips, tricks and tweets by Paul McFedries

Introduction

Why Twitter?

- Thousands of jobs posted there daily
- Job seekers don't have to register or post a resume first
- Good venue for casual, informal networking

Searching for Jobs

- Potential problem:
 - Job postings are from every geographic location.

What if job seeker doesn't want to move?

Searching for Jobs

- Solution:
 - Use Twitter's advanced search engine
<http://search.twitter.com>
 - Searches can be narrowed by zip code (and nearby range)

See what's happening right now

Tip: use operators for advanced search.

The screenshot shows the TweetMyJobs website interface. At the top, there is a navigation bar with the logo and links for Job Seeker, Employer, Veterans, Job Channels On Twitter, Sign Up for Free!, and Login. The main content area features a large graphic of a hand holding a tray with social media icons and the word 'JOBS'. Below this, the text reads 'Serving You Great Job Matches Where You Want Them, When You Want Them'. The search process is divided into two steps: '1. Tell Us What You're Looking For' and '2. And Where To Send Your Job Matches'. Step 1 includes input fields for role, industry, and location. Step 2 includes checkboxes for Email, Mobile, and Twitter. A red 'Send Me Job Matches' button is prominent. To the right, an 'Employers' section offers a 'Learn More' button and a link to 'post a job now'. At the bottom, a section titled 'Companies Hiring On TweetMyJobs' displays logos for Kaiser Permanente, Starbucks, American Express, Wendy's, Discover, Penske, Verizon, and Allstate.
